JOHN DRAKE SEVERELY WOUNDED.

MIS ASSAILANT WILLIAM C. RHINELANDER-CRAZED

BY HIS WIFE'S CONDUCT.

William C. Rhinelander shot and seriously injured John Drake, his father's lawyer, at the office of the latter, No. 79 Cedar-st., on Thursday afternoon. An energetic effort has been made by the wounded man and his friends to conceal the facts of the case on account of his friendly and business relations with the wealthy family of his assailant. The effect of this has been to give currency to false statements, and a rumor that T. J. Oakley Ehinelander, a brother of William C., had attempted to kill Mr. Drake. The facts are that William C. Rhinelander, at about 8:30 on the day mentioned, sat talking with Mr. Drake in the private office of the latter. They were alone. Suddenly Mr. Rhinelander drew a pistol and fired one shot, which wounded Mr. Drake in the shoulder. The latter grappled with his assailant, and, although seriously hurt, was enabled to prevent him from doing further harm, until assistance came and the young man was disarmed.

Mr. Drake's offices, on the third floor of No. 79 Cedar-st., consist of six rooms. George Douglas and James R. Smith, also lawyers, occapy two of these, Mr. Drake's private office fromts on Cedar-st. Two rooms are connected with it, one on the north and one on the east side, each of which opens into a smaller room between the two. When Mr. Drake, after some conversation, the nature of which he declines to disclose, was shot, he seized Rhinelander by the arms and forced him through the room to the cast ward into the smaller room and, when those who heard the shot and the scuffle arrived on the scene, he had Mr. Rhinelander pinned against the wall holding his two arms above his head. Rhinelander in his right hand held a small revolver, which he was trying to discharge a second time. George Douglas, his son Malcelin, John Farrell, the clerk of Mr. Drake, and the office boy rushed into the room, and Mr. Douglas and his son seized Rhinelander, pushed him muo the door in the adjoining room and threw him on the floor and George Douglas wrenched the pistol from h BY HIS WIFE'S CONDUCT.

Mr. Douglas held him, and the office boy ran out, and seen returned with Dr. Edward Peck.

Mr. Drake was then quite exhausted. "I found him," said Dr. Peck. "in a state of partial collapse from shock, but he rallied in a quarter of an hour. I found that the bullet entered from in front. There was no attempt made to arrest Rhinelander at the moment. Mr. Drake said, when a suggestion was made that his assailant should be sent to the Tombs, that he could be had when wanted and must be let alone. He also said that there had been no immediate quarrel between them before the shoting. Rhinelander came in, he said, looked excited, and said that he felt ill, as he had caten nothing in five days. Mr. Drake told him to go over to Pelmonico's and get some bouillon, and admirelander then turned upon and shot him without a word. The wounded man was conveyed to the house of Dr. J. H. Douglas, a brother of occupy longlas, No. 48 East Twenty-sixth st., and was thence taken to the Roosevelt Hospital, where Dr. Henry B. Sands operated upon him, removing some of the shattered pieces of bone from the right shoulder.

Meantime George Douglas held Rhinelander until the uncle of the latter, H. Cruger Oakley, who had been sent for, arrived. Mr. Oakley said that he would be responsible for the appearance of his nephew if he should be wanted, and took him away from the office.

George Douglas gave the following account of the shooting:

George Douglas gave the following account of the shooting:

Yesterday afternoon I was sitting here (in his office adjoining Mr. Drake's). I heard a pistol shot but paid no great attention to it as I did not suppose that it was in this set of offices, Soon after, noticing some movement in the offices adjoining I went in there and passed to the further room where I saw with these struggling with a young man. I knew the young man well. It was William C. Hafinelander, a tall young man about thirty years old. Mr. Drake held him young man about thirty years old. Mr. Drake held him with his back against the wall phinoned, with his arms aloft. In his right hand Rhinelander held a platol. Mr. Drake's office boy. my son, and our clerk Mr. Farrell were at the door at the moment I reached there. Mr. Drake said, "Take hold of his hands," to disharm him, I suppose. We rushed in, all together, and seized him, and helding him so as to prevent his using the pistol, got him into the outer office and put him down on the floor. I took the pestol away from him. Before I did so he tried to suap it and called out to my son, "Let go of ms." Mr. Drake still held him. I took charge of the pistol and went back him to the office. When his coat sleeve was ripped open we could find no sign of an injury till the snonlider was reached, where there was a hlood stam about the size of half a dollar. Mr. Drake said that Rhinelander, when he came in, talked pleasanily about going to Europe and wanted money. I have the pistol, with four chambers loaded nad one discharged.

They were talking pleasantly, Mr. Drake said, when suddenly Rhinelander got up and shot him. Mr. Drake was counsel for William Rhinelander, the father of William C., and disbursed his money, giving the young man what his father directed that he should have. The father and all his family, except William C., are in Europe. The young man is a hinatic. Mr. Drake said that he had no charge to make against him because he was not responsible. I know that Mr. Drake has long been intimate with the family and does not want to distress them. Young Rhinelander is married and has two children. He is about lifty-three years old and has long been the trusted friend and counsellor of Wilham Rhinelander who inherited a large estate in New-York City from his father, William C. Rhinelander, after whom the young man who shot Mr. Drake was named. Mr. Rhine-lander is about 5 feet 10½ inches, of light com-plexion and with a countenance not expressive of great intelligence. He wears eye glasses which dropped off in the strugle and has a light mustache. Inspector Byrnes learned yesterday that Mr.
Rhinelander had been staying for several days at No. 243 Schermerhorn-st., Brooklyn, and that he was still there. Acting on the information, he sent Detective-Sergean's Hickey and Crowley to the house and at five o'clock they arrested their man. He submitted quietly and was taken to police headquarters in this city and locked up. He stated to the Inspector that the reason for shooting Mr. Drake was that the latter was engaged in a scheme to alienate the affections of his wife. He said that his wife was in the habit of visiting Drake at his office, and he rambled on in a disconnected manner about his aversion for "mutual friends."
He mentioned the connection of Moniton in the Beecher-Tilton trial, and the case of Conkling, who shot Haverstick.

At a late hour last night Mr. Drake was resting comfortably at the Rooseveit Hospital.
Those in attendance upon him said that it was too early to tell whether he would recover or not. His arm has not been amputated.

I think he is out of his head decidedly. He brooded over his wrongs, as he called them. He thought Mr. Drake stood between him and his wife. She was insanely jealous of him. They had lived together very unhappily for many years. She was much beneath him in station and is very liliterate. She is Irish, and her name was Maggie McGinnis before she was married. I think that she was a servant. Whenever she did anything against his wishes she always said that she had his folks to back her up, and she could do as she pleased. That seemed to exasperate him to such an extent that he really got beside himself, and he imacined that Mr. Drake stood between him and his domestic happiness. She seemed to be very jealous. It made no difference with whom he conversed, she seemed to think he thought more of them than of her. She is more to be condemned than pitied. She made his life more to be condemned than pitied. McGrath was removed to the Cumberland Street Hospital, where Coroner Menninger took his ante-mortem statement. He said that some one called his attention to a cat and the next he knew he was hot. Carpenter, the watchman, said that cats had recently caused much trouble in the Navy Yard, and he tried to kill all he saw. He had no idea of shooting the boy. LOOKING FOR A MISSING NIECE.

Mrs. Lawrence, of No. 131 Hicks-st., Brooklyn, asked the police of that city last night for help in finding her niece, Miss Catharine Hughson, who reached this city from Glasgow by the steamship State of Pennsylvania on Thursday. Her friends were informed that she had sailed, and were asked to meet her on her arrival. She was expecting to find her lover in Brooklyn. He had preceded her to this country, purposed marrying her and taking her to his home in Colorado. Her uncle went to Castle Garden on learning of the arrival of the steamship, but found that the girl had not come over as he expected in the stearage, but was a second cabin passenger, and that her baggage had been forwarded to Chicago. On the vessel he learned that his niece had been intimate with another girl named Munce, and that a young man named Smith had them much attention. On the arrival of the ship the three went to the Cosmopolitan Hotel in Chambers-st., and passed Thursday night, but they neglected to pay their bills when they went away yesterday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence came to the conclusion that their niece had gone to Chicago with her new companions. Miss Hughson's lover has not yet reached Brooklyn.

TRIAL OF THE NEWARK BANK OFFICIALS.

The trial of the president and managers of the Newark Savings Institution for contempt of the Chancery Court of New-Jersey in disobeying its rules in the matter of the investment and deposit of the bank's funds was begun in the Vice-Chancellor's Court at Newark yesterday. The managers were all present with their counsel, and the depositors were also represented by counsel. After the reading of the petition of the depositors the answers of the managers were read, that of President Dodd occupying nearly half an hour. In regard to two of the managers, Matthias M. Dodd and James G. Barnet, ex-Judge Stevens, of counsel for the depositors, said that he was satisfied they were not guilty of contempt and asked for their discharge; the Vice-Chancellor wrote an order to that effect. Mr. Stevens said that he had been informed that both Mr. Fisk and Mr. Hatch would be willing to go to Newark to give evidence, but they had said to him that their counsel had advised them not to do so. It was important to have their testimony, which could be taken by commission in New-York to-day. He would like the court to make an order for the taking of the testimony in the way suggested. He desired to prove by Messrs. Fisk and Hatch that the allegation made in the petition in regard to the loan of the bank to Fisk & Hatch was true. There was a great difference to be reconciled between the answer of President Dodd and the petition. The Vice-Chancellor made the order for taking testimony, the time of taking it to be fixed by commel. William D. Carter, treasurer of the bank, testified regarding the bank's management since 1876. The essential facts related chiefly to the transaction of the bank with Harriman & Co., of New-York. He stated that several large loans were made to this firm on good collaterals that were, however, prohibited by the terms of the Chancellor's orders. The prisoner with his wife and mother sat beside his counsel and appeared to be in a cheerful mood, not wearing the look of anxiety that he did on the first two days of the trial. Counsellor John F. He thought from Casey's actions that the man was not exactly right. Peter Byley, a truck driver, who lived in a house with Casey four years ago, testified that one night Casey ran out of the house with a pistol in his hand. Casey was sober but looked wild and excited. When they got back to the house Casey told him that there was some one after him. Dr. Joseph L. RELIGIOUS EXERCISES IN SCHOOLS.

A DECISION BY THE STATE SUPERINTENDENT-THE

The State Superintendent of Public Instruction has recently promulgated a decision on the question of religious exercises in the public schools, in which he takes the ground that the only course to be followed, if the benefits of the constitutional guarantees are to be preserved, and the absolute equality of right in matter of religious prediction secured, is to exclude religious instruction and exercises from the public schools during school hours. The question was placed before Superintendent Ruggles by the Board of Education of Union Free School, District No. 4, of Orangetown, Rockland County. This Board applied to the Superintendent for a decision, representing that it wished to "move unerringly, but firmly, in the matter of sustaining the reading of Scrip are and prayer" in opening the school. Children of non-Protestant families had not been required to participate in repeating the Scripture or Lord's prayer, but had simply been required to behave with decorum. The question was raised by a request made by a number of Catholic families that their children be permitted to remain outside the school until the devotional exercises were concluded. The floard was unwilling to grant the request, because the "interference causes much disorder outside of the roem, and the subsequent entrance of these pupils causes a loss of time and disturbance to class work." Hence the appeal to the Superintendent for instructions.

Superintendent Ruggles grounds his decision upon the constitutional guarantee of the absolute equality of all people m the State in respect to the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship. Instruction being free under the public school system, the material resources necessary for its maintenance have to be drawn from a population characterized by dissimilar religious beliefs, observances, modes of worship and preferences. It is impossible to devise a limited measure of religious instruction for the schools upon which all these classes and sects could harmonize, and, therefore, the PRACTICE IN THIS CITY.

and exercises, in Mr. Ruggles's opinion, is the only and exercises, in Mr. Ruggies sopmon, is the salternative.

The schools of New-York City are all opened with the reading of a brief portion of the Holy Scriptures, without note or comment, and in some cases the singing of a hymn. This is done in obedience to a by-law of the Board of Education, whick makes it obligatory. The by-law, in turn, is based on the old State law which went on the statute books as the product of a compromise in 1851 between it obligators. The by-law, in turn, is based on the old State law which went on the statute books as the product of a compromise in 1851 between Thurlow Weed and Archbishop Hughes. For a great many years there has been no disturbance in the schools of this city on the question, and it is thought that even under the last decision of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction there will be none. City Superintendent Jaspur said a day or two ago to a Tribune reporter:

We have had no trouble for eighteen or twenty years on the score of religious exercises, and I do not think any will again arise. The teachers now obey the by-law on the subject and read each morning a portion of the Scriptures, without note or comment. I am bound to see the by-laws obeyed, and if a question should arise, I would refer it at once to the Board. But I do not think trouble will come. It is to the interest of every principal for remain popular with the people whom he is among, and as a rule all principals study the wishes of the parents of their pupils. This guides them in the sciection of the portions of Scripture which are read, Usually they are from the Paalms, Ecclesiastes or Proverbs, and are unobjectionable to any religious feeling. We do not call the exercises religious exercises at all. Attendance it, of course, obligatory, for the reading takes place in the first minutes after it o'clock in the morning, and the general contentment among all classes and sects is shown by the fact that the tardiness of scholars throughout the city is only 2 per cent of the attendance, and this percentage is not made up of the same children day after day.

DEBATING FOR THE KELLY PRIZE.

DEBATING FOR THE KELLY PRIZE.

A wordy battle was waged last night before 500 students and their triends in the Chapel of the Chy College. The occasion was the annual Kelly prize debate between representatives of the two literary societies. The prize is one half the interest accruing from a gift of $1,000 by Eugene Kelly in 1866. At 7:39 President Jean Romer ascended the platform, followed by the debaters, armed with books and papers like amateur lawyers. They seated themselves at two tables at a safe distance from each other, with the president between. The debate was divided into two parts with an intermission of fifteen minutes, during which the strains of half a dozen stringed instruments soothed the troubled spirite of the speakers. In the first part each man was slowed ten minutes, and in the second five. The subject o liscussion was: "Should the Federal Government cont. But so the mannetnance of common schools in the several States of the Union 1" E.W. Scripture, J.S. Pen man, J. E. Holmes for the Pircuscomian Society, Jargued that it should, while B. F. Roeder, G. A. Carls and J. M. Mayer, for the Clionian Society, as stoutly maintained that it should not. The arguments burstled with statistics. The principal boint of contention was the question of the constitutionality of the proposed action.

The judges, John H. V. Arnold, Abel Crook, Rastus S. Ransom, chosen by President Stephen A. Walker, of the trustess sat among the audience. Their decision will be made known on commencement day. The society with the long name has won the debates of the last three years, and its acherents say that this will be its fourth victory. A wordy battle was waged last night before

A STAIN ON THE GOVERNOR'S RECORD. Ex-Alderman J. W. Hawes said yesterday

Ex-Alderman J. W. Hawes said yesterday that he failed to find any justification for Governor Cleveland's refusal to sign the Tenure of Office bill, notwithstanding the excuses put forward by the Governor's friends. Mr. Hawes declared that the provisions of the Tenure of Office bill. The charge was made that the changes in the bill rendered it incomplete and confused instead of being complete and consistent. The only inconsistency existed in having one term for officers appointed by the incoming Mayor and a longer term for their successors, but this fact was of no consequence. Mr. Hawes added that as the reasons given by the Governor for not signing the bill rest on no basis of fact, he must think him insincere. The real reason, be said, must be sought elsewhere, and many persons would find it in the Governor's desire to obtain the support of Hubert O. Thompson and the County Democracy. Many will regard his yielding to this temptation as a stain on his reform record, and as easting grave suspicions on the sincerity of his motives in the support of reform.

ST. MARY'S ACADEMY.

Chickering Hall was well filled yesterday afternoon at the closing exercises of the pupils of St. Mary's Academy, of Nos. 229 and 231 East Broadway. The programme consisted of music, recitations, a grama, "sylvan Dell." presented in two scenes, and six tableaux. The exercises were wound up by a class of small boys giving a representation of the New-York dude. The Rev. William Dumphy of St. Mary's church presented Mary T. McMahou with a prize for vocal, and Mary Agues McDonough a prize for instrumental music.

A SUFFICIENT PLATFORM FOR BLAINE.

Correspondence of The Philadelphia Times.

We are told Mr. Blaine is a dangerous man to place at the head of the Executive Department of this great Government; that the foreign policy he foreshadowed during his short control of the State Department, if carried only, would have precipitated war.

Why! Was it because he invited representatives of the several South American States to Join this Government in a Peace Coavention for the purpose of dissussing a mere perfect union in the interchange of trade and commerce between the two sections, so as to put us on a footing to compete for the trade of that vast country, which is now monopolized by England. France and Germany! If such a measure of public policy was to offend the nations that now control this trade of $800,000,000 and therefore lead to war, how many American citizens would object! If the peaceful putrisuit of such a policy—which, if carried forward with the boldness and carnestness that no other public man can do with the same effect as Mr. Blaine, will find ready purchasers for our yearly increasing surplus products—means war, who, Lask, will shrink from war if it does come! If, further than this, Mr. Blaine will renew his notification to all the powers of the earth that this Government intends to reasert the Monroe doctrina so far as this continent is concerned, is more than the seasifive nerves can stand, then so much more to our shame. But this is not at all likely to happen. All this guestion wants is a free and open discossion, and the more it will become understool, the stronger Mr. Blaine will appear. Instead of capital getting alarmed, instead of industry weakened, confidence and spirit will take possession where to day there is doubt and uncertainty. What is our situation to day, with capital and productive industry in overabundance! We are gradually approaching the phenomenal condition of discontented labor with threats of riots in the midst of plenty and abundance, and threats of riots in the midst of plent

BISMARCK'S HABITS.

From Harper's Magazine for July.

"But," he observed, as we were speaking of it, "it only On one occasion he actually played whist for seven consecutive hours. The game of hazard also possessed a strong fascination for him for a long time. "But," he observed, as we were speaking or it, "it only interests me when the stakes are high and the pool large, and that does not do for a family man." Nevertheless, as lately as the middle of Anguist, 1855, he took part in a game of quinze, but only for diplematic purposes. "It was when I was arranging the Treaty of Gastein with Blome," he explained, "and although I had quite given up cards, I played so rashly on that occasion that the others were perfectly astounded. But I had a design in doing so. Blome had heard that the game of quinze gave one the best opportunity for the study of character, and he was now trying the experiment with me. I thought it a pity not to let the experiment succeed so I lost a couple of hundred thalers, which were really expended in als Majesty's service, and ought to have occurred actually. As a diplomatist, Bismarck naturally keeps a good table. But he by no means despises simple fare. For instance, he eateems pure Nordhausen rye brandy very highly, and keeps a quantity of it beside the more aristocrate cognac to mature and melow in his cellar at Schonhausen. Like Frederick the Great, he has a large appetite. But we must take into consideration that, as a rule, he only eats one meal in the day, and that after 6 o'clock in the evening, and that those wito have much brain-work require a great deal of food. He was formerly an inveterate smoker, and once travelied from Cologne to Berlin and smoked all the way "mit einem Fener," i.e. lighting each cigar from the one he had just finished. But after 1870 he gradually gave up cigars, on account of his health, and smoked all hong pipe instead; and in 1881 he toid me that he had given up smoking altogether, as it no longer agreed with him.

For a good many years—in fact, since his residence in St. Petersburg—the Prince's health has not been partientarly good, though his appearance does not take good care that there shall be no lack of this. It may be mentioned in this connection that the Prince's sight is not good for distant objects, but that he does not wear glasses when reading or writing; and that, like all nervous people, he is fone of warm clothing and hot rooms.

The Prince may be described as of a choleric temperament. Anger with him assumes a voicanic aspect, and vents itself in violent outbursts. But the voicane descout as quickly as it flared up, and there is no thought of malice. Altogether Bismarck possesses a most kindly disposition, which displays itself in acts of compassion and benevolence. He was always kind to the poor. One night at Bar-le-Duc he cut a piece of bread for a humry sentinel and brought jt out to him himself. After the battle of Beaumont he gave some tired and straggling Bayarian soldiers drink from his own flask. He sent clears to the wounded soldiers at Donehery, and frequently visited the hospital at Versailles, and cheered and saw to the comfort of the stek.
